Abreu SOC, the first security operations centre to be included in a Portuguese law firm, uses artificial intelligence, and it is housed at the firm's premises

According to the firm, is the first entity in the law and justice sector in Portugal, and one of the first at world level, to present a SOC with its own premises and internal team, enabling the firm to continue the work it has been doing to detect and combat cybercrime, in cooperation with public and private organizations throughout the world.

João Cupertino (pictured), head of IT at Abreu Advogados, said "We want to promote and participate on all major threat intelligence networks around the world and to develop cooperation among the legal sector, to enable detection and prevention for current and future cyber threats. The risks to security are high and the market needs a quick and effective response from all organisations, and law firms are not different".
