AGM Abogados has moved its Madrid headquarters to new, more spacious, and modern offices located in Paseo de la Castellana 140, in the heart of Madrid's financial centre

According to the law firm, this supports AGM Abogados strategic growth ambitions and its efforts towards consolidating its headquarters in the capital as a benchmark. Jordi Rovira Esteve, CEO of the firm, said: "This move is a true reflection of our continued and sustained commitment to the firm's clients and the AGM team". Likewise, among its goals is the continuous incorporation of new professionals within the Legal sector, hence the increase in its workforce in recent months and its fastest-growing areas, M&A and Dispute Resolution.

The head of the Madrid office, Gregorio Riber Arranz (pictured), stated that the change of offices responds to the firm's growth and future strategy: "Which is unequivocally committed to consolidating the firm at a national level, strengthening our position in the capital and thus improving connections with our clients and relations with the different economic agents."

The director is not unaware that at a time like the present when there is a clear trend towards remote working, a move like this could seem paradoxical. However, Riber clarified that: "From the firm's management we firmly believe in people, and it is precisely teamwork and the interaction of human capital that improves performance and service quality, especially in an activity such as ours."

The director also confirms that the relocation of its headquarters in Madrid to "spacious, modern and more representative" facilities is another milestone towards achieving the AGM group's growth objectives for the coming years at all levels, team, turnover and clients.
