Gómez-Acebo & Pombo has advised Tekpolio on the acquisition of Irontec, advised by

Cuatrecasas, a technology company specialised in open source software

Tekpolio, the family office of the Delclaux family, has acquired Irontec, a technology consultancy firm founded in Bilbao in 2003. After buying 100% of the capital from the founders, the new owner has placed at the head of the company a team led by Ignacio Uriguen, CEO, and Pablo Pérez Dapena, CFO, in addition to maintaining all the previous managers. In this context, two new positions have been added to Irontec's management, Irontec is a technology company based in Bilbao specialised in IT engineering and dedicated to open-source technologies applied to telecommunications and VoIP, infrastructures and systems, software engineering and development, data and cybersecurity, among others.

This deal, according to both companies, allows Irontec to take on the important technological and commercial expansion that it aspires to carry out in the next few years in the local, national and international level, allowing it to maintain and strengthen its decision centre in the Basque Country.

"We are proud to lead the new stage of one of the leading technology companies in the sector. the benchmark technology companies in the sector. A new cycle full of opportunities is opening in which we will continue working to put the most cutting-edge technologies at the service of our clients' digitalisation processes." said Ignacio Uriguen, the new CEO.

On the other hand, Cuatrecasas advised Irontec with a team led by partner Jose Ramón Berecibar Mutiozabal.
