Ramón y Cajal Abogados has hired Gonzalo Mairata (pictured) as a new partner to head the firm's labour law department.

At an academic level, the new partner of the firm has given numerous lectures on labour matters and has been a professional tutor of internships for the law degree at the university level.

With more than twelve years of experience, Mairata has held the position of state lawyer, assuming advisory functions, advising on labour law matters of all entities, commercial companies and foundations of the state public sector.

Likewise, he has also carried out contentious functions, representing and defending in court before all the bodies of the social jurisdiction, especially the Social Division of the National High Court.
